What is the difference between Korean, Chinese, and Japanese chopsticks?

Chinese Chopsticks

- The Chinese were the first people to invent chopsticks over 5000 years ago.
- They are mostly made of unfinished wood and have a rectangular shape with the blunt end.
- Chinese chopsticks are long and thicker than Korean and Japanese models.
- These chopsticks are long since Chinese food is often served on "Lazy Susan's."

Japanese Chopsticks

- The Japanese developed distinctive types of chopsticks.
- They have numerous styles of chopsticks used for different purposes, including cooking usage, eating specific meals, picking up sweets, and during funerals.
- The Japanese use a number of materials in the making of their chopsticks. Wood and plastics are the primary materials utilized today.
- Japanese chopsticks are generally rounded at the ends and shorter than Chinese models but longer than Korean models.
- They are also more colourful and intricately designed.

Korean Chopsticks

- Korean chopsticks are often stainless steel, while those utilized in Japan and China are made of natural materials.
- Because metal can be slippery, these chopsticks are made rough at the ends in order to diminish that trait.
- Another noticeable difference is that they are not of the same length as those used in Japan and China.
- In the early times, pure silver chopsticks were only used by the king as the silver would change its color if anyone attempted to poison the king's food.

Changing Chopsticks

- The Changing Chopsticks could decrease the size of the user, an object or many people and objects together.
- In the beginning it was shown that the Changing Chopsticks needed physical combat to decrease someone's size, but later in the series it could unleash a yellow beam to do so.
- It could also be used in combination with the Reversing Mirror to increase an object's size, but both Shen Gong Wu were then required to shrink things to their normal size.
- Regardless of the size modification, if the change was not reversed within a day, the results will become permanent.
